"If I told you in the strongest words at my command that the feeling of the Japaneze Government and people toward America and Americans is of the most cordial description. I would tell you no more than the simple truth. The name of your country is indelibly implanted on Japan's modern history, and the imprint is one which both nations can justly regard with feelings of pride and reutual good will.

"Perry's mission and the manner in which it was carried to a successful conclusion without injury to the interests or offence to the suscoptibilities of the Japanese nation is an old story, but a story that cannot be told too often. [Applause] We feel that America is a friend, whose friendship is one of deeds, not words, as rich in promise for the future as it has been fruitful of performance in the past. [Applause] That, in brief, is how America is considered in Japan."
